Project Title: San Francisco Central Shops Replacement Facilities

The design concept of the Selby-Galvez project is based on accentuating the diverse functional requirements of the Central Shops' needs, and exploring the expressive capabilities of the building's structural systems. Within the restrictions of the site, the proposed building at 555 Selby Street is designed to provide both an appealing experience for the everyday users of the shop and office spaces inside, as well as a dynamic visual element to be observed from I-280 to the West. The building's exterior was designed to allow natural light into the space, while remaining sensitive to the visual and acoustic considerations brought about by the presence of the highway above. The shifting vertical massing of the exterior walls is intended to reflect the changing functional uses inside, and the building's visual 'crown' was conceived as a visual expression of the steel structural system that runs so prominently throughout the new shop's interior spaces. The desired effect of the building and landscape design together are ultimately to enliven and invigorate a challenging site within an industrial context by pairing the building's energetic aesthetic appearance with the omnipresent environmental considerations of sound, light and air quality, and of course, to fulfil the needs of the Central Shops' programmed requirements in an efficient and well-reasoned manner.
