WORKER RIGHTS
CONSORTIUM

WORKER RIGHTS CONSORTIUM ASSESSMENT
POPULAR INTERNATIONAL GARMENT CO., LTD.
(MYANMAR/BURMA)

June 19, 2020

I. Introduction and Executive Summary

From January through June 2020, the Worker Rights Consortium (“WRC”) conducted an offsite assessment for the City and County of San Francisco (“City”) of working conditions and labor practices at Popular International Garment Co., Ltd. (“Popular Garment”) in Yangon, Myanmar (Burma). The factory is owned by Jiangsu Beame Outdoor Products Co., Ltd. (“Beame”), a manufacturer of outerwear based in Nanjing, China. Popular Garment, which was registered in Myanmar/Burma in 2012,¹ has, according to employees, a workforce of roughly 1,600 employees.

The WRC conducted the investigation of Popular Garment after the factory was disclosed by the Cincinnati, Ohio-based, Fechheimer Brothers Co. (“Fechheimer”) as a supplier to the City’s vendor, Muscatello’s, of apparel sold for use by employees of the City’s Municipal Transportation Agency (“Muni”). As suppliers of apparel purchased by the City, Muscatello’s, Fechheimer and Popular Garment are subject to the City’s Sweatfree Procurement Ordinance (“the Ordinance”), which requires facilities that manufacture clothing and footwear for the City to comply with certain labor and human rights standards.² The WRC initiated its assessment of Popular Garment pursuant to the WRC’s contractual obligations as the City’s independent monitor of City apparel suppliers’ compliance with the Ordinance.

In the course of this assessment, the WRC determined that the Popular Garment factory also has been disclosed by the US golf-wear brand, Cutter & Buck, as one of the latter’s suppliers for apparel licensed by universities affiliated with the WRC. As such, the factory is required to comply with university codes of conduct, and Cutter and Buck is obligated by the terms of its licensing agreements with these universities to ensure such compliance.³ The factory has also been listed as a supplier by the German brand, Lidl⁴ and, according to workers, in addition, supplies the brands Port Authority and Liegelind and is thereby subject to those brands’ supplier codes of conduct as well.

The WRC notes that the management of the facility initially cooperated with the WRC’s assessment, agreeing to a physical inspection of its facility in March 2020. With the onset of the novel coronavirus (Covid-19) pandemic, the WRC then postponed the facility visit until such a visit no longer would constitute a health risk to the WRC’s inspectors and the factory employees.

However, subsequent to the postponement of the inspection, Popular Garment unfortunately has been less forthcoming and, despite several requests to do so, have not provided access to relevant documents and other information requested by the WRC. As a result, this report is based on firsthand testimony and copies of company documents provided to the WRC by workers from Popular Garment.

These employees were interviewed by the WRC offsite, away from the factory premises, in keeping with best practice for labor rights investigations. The WRC continues to seek from Popular Garment and, if it is provided by the factory, will review documents and other information from its management related to the findings discussed in this report and will revise these findings if and where warranted by such information.

The WRC's preliminary assessment of Popular Garment identified violations of Burmese labor law, international labor conventions—and, by extension, the City's Ordinance and university codes of conduct—as well as other relevant standards in the following areas:

- Working Hours – including involuntary overtime, excessive overtime, and insufficient break periods;
- Wages and Benefits – including uncompensated overtime, unlawful wage deductions, nonpayment of the City's non-poverty wage, and restrictions on use of statutory sick leave, injury leave, bereavement leave, and casual leave;
- Employment Contracts – including illegal employment of workers under successive one-day contracts;
- Freedom of Association – including prima facie evidence of discriminatory mass dismissal of five union leaders and nearly 300 other workers who are union members;
- Harassment and Abuse – including verbal abuse and profanity toward workers by supervisors and inappropriate surveillance of the entrance to the factory's restrooms; and
- Occupational Health and Safety – including hazards in the areas of ergonomics, lack of adequate machine guarding and personal protective equipment, excessive workplace temperatures, unhygienic restrooms and eating areas, and unsafe employer-provided transportation.⁵

It should be noted that the fact that the WRC's investigation, as reported in this document, did not yield findings of violations in certain other areas of the factory's labor practices should not be construed as a certification of the factory's overall compliance with respect to its practices in those areas. Moreover, due to the onset of Covid-19, the WRC has yet to conduct a physical inspection of the factory. Therefore, no inference should be drawn from this report as to the compliance of the factory with aspects of occupational health and safety or building safety that can only be certified via an inspection of the factory by a qualified industrial hygienist or engineer.

⁵ It should be noted that, as the WRC's assessment of the factory was initiated prior to the onset of the Covid-19 pandemic and did not include an onsite inspection by an industrial hygienist, the discussion in this report does not touch on the safety and health measures that are necessary for factories to adopt to protect garment workers from the transmission of Covid-19. For discussion of such measures, see, Worker Rights Consortium and Maquiladora Health & Safety Support Network, "Effective Infection Control Practices and Policies for Operating Apparel and Textile Factories," April 2020, <https://www.workersrights.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/04/WRC-MHSSN-Infection-Control-04102020.pdf>.

The violations the WRC has identified in this report, though significant, are amenable to remediation and correction by the factory's owner, Beaume, with the assistance and involvement of the City's suppliers, Fechheimer and Muscatello's, and the university licensee, Cutter and Buck. As indicated in the conclusion to this report, the WRC requests that Beaume respond to each of the findings in this report with whatever relevant information the company wishes to provide and, also, indicate its willingness to implement the recommendations for corrective action identified, along with a time-bound schedule for doing so. The WRC asks that Fechheimer and Cutter and Buck require Beaume to provide such a response by July 20, 2020.

II. Methodology

The WRC's assessment of Popular Garment included 22 in-depth interviews with individual workers, nearly a dozen small group conversations with a total of 20 workers, and one large group discussion with more than 30 workers, all of which were conducted from January through June 2020, with current and recent factory employees. Consistent with best practice for labor and human rights assessments, these interviews and discussions were held confidentially at locations offsite from the factory premises. The WRC also reviewed company documents which were made available to the WRC's assessors by the factory's workers including pay slips and company announcements.

III. Terms of Reference

The WRC assessed Popular Garment's labor practices and working conditions in relation to its obligations under the City's Ordinance, university codes of conduct, Burmese labor law and regulations, international labor standards, including those conventions of the International Labour Organization (ILO) which Myanmar has ratified or is otherwise obligated to respect, and the codes of conduct of Popular Garment's customers, Lidl, Port Authority, and Liegeland,⁶ and the Myanmar Garment Manufacturers Association, of which Popular Garment is a member.⁷

IV. Findings of Violations and Recommendations for Corrective Action

The subsections below detail the findings of the WRC with respect to working conditions and labor practices at Popular Garment that violate the City's Ordinance, Burmese labor laws, relevant codes of conduct, and/or international labor standards. Unless otherwise specified, the findings in this report relate to practices identified before the onset of the Covid-19 pandemic affected the global garment industry.

A. Hours of Work

According to workers' testimonies, employees are required to work six days per week, Monday through Saturday. From Monday through Friday, the employees' regular work shift starts at 8:00 a.m. and ends at 4:30 p.m. Employees receive a 30-minute unpaid lunch break, starting at 12:00 p.m. and ending at 12:30 p.m. On Saturday, the employees' work shift begins at 8:00 a.m. and ends at 12:00 p.m. Altogether employees' regular workweek totals 44 hours in length, which complies with Burmese law.⁸

However, workers added that, consistently, on Mondays through Fridays, without any additional rest break, they continue working for two more hours until 6:30 p.m. for a total of 10 paid working hours per day. Moreover, when the date to ship an order to a buyer nears, workers are frequently required to perform an additional two to two-and-a-half hours of overtime, again without a break, until 8:30 p.m. or 9.00 p.m., for a total work day of 12 to 12.5 paid hours. In addition, in such instances, workers typically are required to perform, on Saturdays, after their meal break, four more overtime hours from 12:30 p.m. to 4.30 p.m.

These working schedules result in employees performing, at minimum, 43hours of overtime per month and, in some cases, up to 26.5 hours of overtime in a single week.

In addition, according to workers, Popular Garment requires employees to attend a daily meeting in the factory at 7:50 a.m., 10 minutes before the start of their regular work shifts, where employees are informed of their daily production targets and any other assignments. If the workers fail to attend these meetings they are scolded by their supervisors, even though employees are not paid for the additional 10 minutes they spend in the factory each day to attend these meetings.

As discussed further below, Popular Garment's practices in this area violate Burmese labor laws concerning working hours with regard to: (1) mandatory overtime, (2) excessive overtime, and (3) provision of a rest break during overtime.

1. Mandatory Overtime

Findings

Burmese labor law requires that overtime be performed voluntarily.⁹ As noted above, employees work at least two hours of overtime on nearly a daily basis, including two or four hours of additional work performed after the end of their regular shifts, plus 10 minutes each morning, when they are required to arrive at 7:50 a.m., before the 8:00 a.m. start of their work shift to attend a mandatory pre-shift meeting.

⁸ Factories Act, § 59 ("No adult worker shall be required or allowed to work in a factory for more than forty-fours hours in a week.").

⁹ Factories Act, § 62 ("No adult worker shall be required [...] to work in a factory for more than eight hours in any day.").

Employees reported that, if they request a gate pass from their supervisors in order to leave the factory at the end of their regular shift—i.e., without remaining to work overtime—they will incur the disfavor of their supervisor, who will yell at and otherwise verbally abuse them. By subjecting employees who choose to leave the factory at the end of the normal working day—instead of remaining to perform overtime—to verbal abuse by their supervisors, Popular Garment unlawfully denies employees the right to make a voluntary decision whether or not to perform this extra work.

Popular Garment further restricts employees' right to decide voluntarily whether or not to perform overtime by, on weekdays, scheduling the bus transportation—which the company provides for workers to travel home from the factory—so that buses are only available after overtime hours have ended. As a result, employees who choose not to perform overtime—and only employees who choose not to perform overtime—must pay for and arrange transportation to their homes at their own expense, rather than having this provided by the company free of charge. By conditioning employees' access to a valuable benefit (employer-paid transportation) on employees remaining at the factory during overtime hours, the company further unlawfully denies employees the right to decide voluntarily whether or not to perform this extra work.

Finally, as further discussed below, Popular Garment requires workers to arrive at the factory 10 minutes before the start of their regular shift to attend a meeting, for which time the employees are not paid. Employees made clear to the WRC that these pre-shift, off-the-clock meetings are mandatory, as they reported that their line leaders and supervisors will verbally reprimand them if they are “late” to these meetings. As the time workers spend at these meetings is outside their regular eight-hour shifts and as workers attend these meeting at the direction and for the benefit of the employer, this time represents overtime work for which employees legally should be able to choose voluntarily whether or not to perform.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance the factory:

- Communicate to all employees that performing overtime hours of any kind is strictly voluntarily and workers will not be penalized for declining to do so;
- Prohibit supervisors, upon penalty of discipline, from verbally or otherwise harassing or abusing workers for declining to perform overtime;
- Provide employer-paid transportation for workers at the end of their regular working hours, exclusive of any overtime; and
- Reschedule either the beginning of employees' paid work shift or the time of the daily pre-shift meetings, so that these meetings can be held during regular paid working hours.

2. Excessive Overtime

Finding

Burmese labor law prohibits employers from requiring or permitting employees to work more than 10 hours in a single day, inclusive of rest periods.¹⁰ As employees at Popular Garment begin their regular work shift at 8:00 a.m. (and as they are actually required to start work 10 minutes earlier by attending a pre-shift meeting) and typically perform overtime until at least 6:30 p.m., for a total workday of 10 hours and 30 minutes (or 10 hours and 40 minutes including the pre-shift meetings), including their unpaid rest periods, the factory regularly violates this legal limit.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance the factory limit employees' working day, including any overtime offered to workers to 10 hours in a single day, inclusive of rest periods.

3. Non-provision of Overtime Break

Findings

Burmese labor law requires employers to provide workers with at least a 30-minute break after every five hours of continuous work.¹¹ As noted, Popular Garment complies with this requirement with respect to its employees' morning working hours, which begin at 8:00 a.m. (or more accurately, 7:50 a.m., considering that they are required to attend the daily pre-shift meeting), by providing workers with a midday unpaid break from 12:00 p.m. to 12:30 p.m.

However, with regard to the employees' afternoon and evening working hours, the company violates the law, by requiring employees to continue to work without any breaks after the end of their regular hours. If the employees leave the factory, having worked two hours of daily overtime, at the usual time of 6:30 p.m., this results in a continuous work period of at least six hours. If the employees leave at the time required near order deadlines, at 9:00 or 9:30 p.m., this causes employees to work for eight-and-a-half or nine hours straight, exacerbating this violation

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance, when the factory offers overtime work to employees, it limit these overtime hours or provide workers with an additional rest break to ensure that employees do not work more than five hours without such an extra break.

¹⁰ Factories Act § 64 ("The periods of work of an adult worker in a factory inclusive of intervals for rest under § 63, shall be so arranged that such periods shall not spread over more than ten hours in any day, save with the permission of the President and subject to such conditions as he may impose, either generally or in the case of any particular factory.").

¹¹ Factories Act, § 63 ("The periods of work of adult workers in a factory during each day shall be so fixed that no period shall exceed five hours and that no worker shall work for more than five hours before he has had an interval for rest at least of half an hour.").

B. Wages and Benefits

Myanmar's laws and regulations establishing the country's minimum wage require employers to pay workers (for an eight-hour shift) MMK 4,800 (US$3.42) per day and MMK 144,000 per month (US$102.90).¹² However, the law permits employers to pay workers a lower probationary wage of MMK 2,400 (US$1.70) per day for workers' first three months of employment and, if workers require further training after the end of this probationary period, a wage of MMK 3,600 (US$2.55) per day for their fourth through sixth months on the job.¹³

Workers' testimony indicated that the wages that the company pays its regular employees comply with this legal standard. Skilled workers such as sewing operators earn MMK 4,800 (US$3.42), double the legal minimum for the probationary period, during their first three months of employment.

Unskilled workers, who are hired as "helpers", earn probationary wages of MMK 3,600 (US$2.55) per day, MMK 1,200 more than the legal minimum for this period, which is MMK 2,400 (US$1.70) per day. Moreover, for their fourth through sixth months at the factory and beyond, these workers, of whom the factory employs roughly 200, are paid the standard minimum wage of MMK 4,800 per day, which, again, exceeds the legal "training" wage permitted during this period of MMK 3,600 (US$3.42) per day.

In addition to these legally mandatory minimum wages, Popular Garments also pay workers several types of discretionary monthly bonuses. The first is a bonus for skilled workers whose amount is set according to the company's evaluation of the employee's skill level, which is rated as "A" (highest), "B" (intermediate), or "C" (lowest) depending on which machines the worker is able to operate. A worker at the "A" skill level receives a bonus of MMK 13,000 (US$9.30) per month, at the "B" level, MMK 10,000 (US$7.15) per month, and for the "C" level MMK 7,000 kyats (US$5.00) per month. Workers who are designated as "helpers" (unskilled) are paid a bonus of MMK 5,000 (US$3.58) per month.

Second, Popular Garment also pays workers an attendance bonus of up to MMK 20,000 (US$14.30) per month, although, as discussed further below, the company reduces the amount of this bonus if the employee has been absent during the prior month—even if the absence was for statutory leave. Third, workers can earn a "ticket bonus", in an amount based on the number of pieces that the employee is able to produce beyond the production quotas set by the company. Some workers reported they do not earn any ticket bonuses, while others report earning as much as MMK 18,000 (US$13.00) per month.

Although the wage practices described above comply with Burmese law, the WRC found certain other aspects of Popular Garment's payment of wages to workers that violate these laws, including: (1) nonpayment of overtime performed by workers, (2) unlawful punitive wage deductions, and (3) underpayment of the City’s non-poverty wage. All these violations are discussed in detail below.

1. Unpaid Overtime Work

Findings

As previously noted, employees reported that they are required to arrive at their work station in the factory at 7:50 a.m. to attend daily meetings, 10 minutes before the beginning of their work shift, for which they are not paid. Because the time that employees are required to spend at the factory before their paid work shifts to attend pre-shift meetings is outside the full legal working day, workers legally must be compensated for this time as overtime at the overtime premium rate of twice the worker’s usual hourly wage.¹⁴ Popular Garment’s failure to pay its employees for time spent attending meetings before the start of their regular workday at the overtime premium rate, violates Burmese labor law.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City’s Ordinance the factory:

- Cease scheduling such meetings before the start of employees’ regular work-shifts; and
- Compensate employees, at the legal premium rate for overtime, for all time spent at pre-shift meeting, from their date of hire until these meetings are no longer held outside of regular working hours or to the applicable statutory limit for such compensation, whichever is lesser.

2. Unlawful Wage Deductions

Findings

Burmese laws prohibit employers from taking deductions from workers’ wages on account of an employee’s absence from work, if the absence is due to use of statutory leave.¹⁵ Like many other factories in Burma, however, Popular Garment, as discussed below, violates this prohibition by taking deductions from workers’ MMK 20,000 (US$14.30) monthly attendance bonus when employees are absent from work for any reason, even when the absence is on account of the employee taking statutory annual, sick, casual, bereavement, or occupational injury leave.

The WRC’s interviews with Popular Garment workers indicated that an employee’s first day of absence in a month, for any reason, including use of such statutory leave, results in the employee’s attendance bonus being halved from MMK 20,000 (US$14.30) to MMK 10,000

¹⁴ Factories Act § 73 (“Wages for overtime: Where a worker in a factory works for more hours than those specified in section ... 62 ... he shall in respect of the overtime so worked be entitled to be paid at the rate of twice his ordinary rate of wages.”).

¹⁵ Payment of Wages Act, 2016, § 7 (a) (“The Employer [...] can deduct from wages for absences except when such absence is during a public holiday or entitled leave, according to the law.”).

(US$7.15) and for any subsequent day of leave during the month, forfeited entirely. As the company takes these deductions even when an employee's absence is due to use of statutory leave, they are unlawful—and doubly so because, as explained below, they serve to restrict workers' use of benefits to which they are legally entitled.¹⁶

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance Popular Garment:

- Cease its practice of deducting from workers' attendance bonus for use of statutory leave; and
- Compensate employees for all such deductions that have been taken, from their date of hire until this practice is ceased or to the applicable statutory limit for such compensation, whichever is lesser.

3. Non-poverty Wages

Findings

While compliant with Myanmar's legal minimum wage, the wages Popular Garment employees receive for their regular working hours falls well short of the non-poverty wage rate that the factory is required to pay workers under the City's Ordinance. In 2019, the City set its minimum non-poverty wage rate for factories in Myanmar that supply the City at US$1.07 per hour excluding benefits and at US$1.28 per hour including healthcare and retirement benefits.¹⁷

As discussed above, the WRC found, based on workers' reported monthly wages as confirmed by pay slips provided by workers, that the minimum starting wage at the factory is MMK 3,600 (US$2.55) per day, which is the rate at which employees are hired as unskilled workers ("helpers"). In addition to this amount, as noted, such workers are further guaranteed a bonus of MMK 5,000 (US$3.58) per month, or MMK 192 (US$0.14) per day. As the other elements of their pay, including the "attendance bonus" and the "ticket bonuses" are contingent on the worker having perfect attendance or fulfilling production quotas, they cannot be considered as components of the factory's minimum wage.

As a result, for determining compliance with the City's non-poverty wage standard, applicable monthly minimum wages at Popular Garment are MMK 3,792 (US$2.69) per day, including the regular starting wages and the standard bonus paid to unskilled workers ("helpers"). As these wages are paid for these employees working their regular eight-hour shift, they are the equivalent of US$0.34 per hour, or only 32 percent of the City's non-benefitted non-poverty wage.

¹⁶ Payment of Wages Act, 2016, § 7 (a) ("The Employer [...] can deduct from wages for absences except when such absence is during a public holiday or entitled leave, according to the law.").

¹⁷ City of San Francisco Office of Labor Standards Enforcement, "Sweatfree Contracting Ordinance (Administrative Code Chapter 12U): 2020 International Wage and Benefit Rates," https://sfgov.org/olse/sites/default/files/2020_Wage%20Rates%20International.pdf.

Under the City’s Ordinance, an employer can also comply with the non-poverty wage requirement by paying a base wage and providing healthcare and retirement benefits whose total value is 20 percent higher than the non-benefitted non-poverty wage, which, for Myanmar, is US$1.28 per hour. In Myanmar, however, the rate of required employer contributions into the country’s Social Security Fund, which provides these benefits to workers, is only three percent of the minimum wage applicable to the employee.¹⁸ As a result, even if one includes the value of these employer contributions when calculating workers’ wages, the compensation paid to workers at Popular Garment is only US$0.35 per hour (US$0.34 per hour x 1.03), which is only 27 percent of the benefitted non-poverty wage standard under the City’s Ordinance.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that Popular Garment ensure compliance with the City’s non-poverty wage requirement by increasing workers’ base daily wages, inclusive of the guaranteed monthly bonus, and exclusive of contingent production and attendance bonuses, by amounts sufficient to provide a minimum pay rate that complies with the City’s non-benefitted non-poverty wage standard for Myanmar. If, as seems very likely, payment of the non-poverty wage is not financially feasible for the factory, the WRC recommends that Fechheimer assist Popular Garment in complying with this standard.

C. Statutory Paid Time Off

1. Restrictions on Statutory Sick, Casual, Bereavement, and Occupational Injury Leaves

Findings

Burmese law requires that workers be afforded, on an annual basis, six days of paid casual leave;¹⁹ up to 30 days of sick leave with medical authorization,²⁰ to be paid via the state social security system;²¹ and paid bereavement leave to attend the funeral of a family member or parent.²² As discussed below, the country’s laws also require that workers who are injured at work be afforded up to 12 months of physician-approved medical leave for their recovery.²³

While Popular Garment allows workers to take such paid statutory leaves, as discussed above, employees are penalized for, and, thereby, restricted from, doing so by the factory’s practice of taking unlawful deductions from employees’ attendance bonuses if they are absent from work, even if the absence is for the purpose of approved statutory leave.

¹⁸ Social Security Law, 2012.

¹⁹ Leave and Holidays Act, 1951 (“Leave and Holidays Act”), § 5.

²⁰ Leave and Holidays Act, § 6.

²¹ Minimum Wages Rules, § 43 (c).

²² Minimum Wages Rules, § 43 (d).

²³ Social Security Law, 2012, § 52 (a) (“The insured has the right, if the employment injury occurs, to take medical care in accord with the stipulations and to enjoy other benefits contained in this chapter.”), and § 55 (“The insured who suffers reduction or cessation of earnings by reason of incapable to work of employment injury, free medical treatment in addition to temporary disability benefit of 70 per cent of average wage within four months prior to occupational accident shall be entitled to enjoy commencing from the date of incapacity for work, to a maximum of 12 months under medical certificate.”).

Moreover, according to factory workers, the company further restricts employees' access to statutory leave by requiring workers to obtain permission from the factory's human resources office, whose personnel loudly voice their disapproval when employees submit requests for such leaves.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that Popular Garment takes the following measures to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance:

- Provide workers with statutory leave without deducting their attendance bonus or subjecting them to verbal disapproval; and
- Provide back pay for attendance bonuses illegally deducted in the past.

2. Failure to Provide Paid Occupational Injury Leaves

Findings

Burmese law requires factories to ensure, in case of occupational accidents, that workers are able to take medically approved leave for their recovery.²⁴ Workers testified that they had witnessed several cases where workers who were injured on the job were not able to take paid leave and, as a result, returned to the job before their injuries healed. The company's failure to ensure that the workers can take paid leave during recuperation from occupational injuries is a violation of Burmese law.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance, Popular Garment should:

- Provide back pay to workers who have been victims of workplace accidents in the past and have been unable to take paid leave to recuperate; and
- Ensure that workers who experience occupational accidents going forward will receive sufficient paid leave to recuperate.

²⁴ Social Security Law, 2012, § 52 (a) ("The insured has the right, if the employment injury occurs, to take medical care in accord with the stipulations and to enjoy other benefits contained in this chapter."), and § 55 ("The insured who suffers reduction or cessation of earnings by reason of incapable to work of employment injury, free medical treatment in addition to temporary disability benefit of 70 per cent of average wage within four months prior to occupational accident shall be entitled to enjoy commencing from the date of incapacity for work, to a maximum of 12 months under medical certificate.").

D. Terms of Employment

1. Non-provision of Employment Contracts

Findings

According to Burmese law, employers must provide workers with a written employment contract within the first 30 days of their hire.²⁵ Workers interviewed by the WRC consistently reported that Popular Garment has not provided them with a written employment contract since they began their work at the company.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance, Popular Garment should provide all workers with a written contract.

2. Illegal Employment of Workers under One-Day (Daily) Contracts.

Findings

According to workers, in April 2020, Popular Garment began employing a number of workers at the factory under successive one-day contracts ("daily contracts"). These daily contract workers are employed in the factory's main production operations. As discussed below, the introduction of daily contract workers at Popular Garment coincided with the dismissal of hundreds of regular workers.

Although Burmese law does not prohibit employment of workers under daily contracts in all circumstances, it limits the duration of such arrangements to 30 days, after which time the employer must provide an employee who has been working under daily contracts with a standard employment agreement.²⁶ As this is the case, under law, all workers hired under daily contracts 30 or more days prior to the current date must be issued regular employment contracts.

Recommendations

To comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance, the WRC recommends that Popular Garment employ all workers with more than 30 days of service at the factory under regular contracts.

E. Freedom of Association

Prior to the onset of the Covid-19 pandemic, Popular Garment's workforce of 1,600 employees included roughly 600 workers who were members of the Industrial Workers' Federation of Myanmar (“IWF”) union, among whom were seven employees who formed the union’s elected in-plant leadership committee. This committee, which included the union’s in-plant officers, had previously negotiated and signed agreements with the factory’s management concerning labor relations issues.

During April and May 2020, Popular Garment laid-off roughly 480 employees, among whom were 300 out of the factory’s roughly 600 union members and, within the latter group, five out of seven members of the union leadership committee. As discussed below, the WRC obtained an independent statistical analysis of the probability that, all other factors being equal, such an across-the-board layoff would include such a large proportion of the union’s rank-and-file membership and in-plant leadership.

As explained in the subsections below, based on this analysis, the WRC found that a prima facie case exists that the company discriminatorily targeted employees who were union leaders and members in the layoff, thereby violating Burmese law, the City’s Ordinance, and university codes of conduct.

1. Discriminatory Layoff of Elected Union Leaders

Findings

The WRC consulted with a professional statistician at Pennsylvania State University who calculated that, all other factors being equal, the probability that the company would select, among the roughly 500 workers out of the plant’s total workforce of 1,600 whom it chose to layoff, five out of seven members of the union’s in-plant committee was less than 3 percent. This being the case, the WRC finds that there is prima facie evidence that this layoff deliberately and discriminatorily targeted these five workers because they were union leaders.

Such apparent discriminatory targeting of union leaders for adverse action violates international labor standards, Burmese law, and, by extension, the City’s Ordinance and university codes of conduct. ILO Convention 98—which Myanmar, as a member state of the ILO, is bound to observe under the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work—prohibits dismissal of workers on account of their participation in a union.²⁷ Moreover, Burmese law explicitly requires the reinstatement of union leaders who have been dismissed on account of their union activities.²⁸

²⁷ ILO Convention 98, “Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining,” (prohibiting “dismissal of ... a worker by reason of union membership or because of participation in union activities”); ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Right at Work (1998) (“[A]ll Members, even if they have not ratified the Conventions in question, have an obligation arising from the very fact of membership in the Organization to respect, to promote and to realize, in good faith and in accordance with the Constitution, the principles concerning the fundamental rights which are the subject of those Conventions, namely: (a) freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining....”).

²⁸ Labor Organisation Law, § 18 (“The labour organization has the right to demand the relevant employer to re-appoint a worker if such worker is dismissed by the employer and if there is cause to believe that the reasons of such dismissal were based on labour organization membership or activities, or were not in conformity with the labour laws.”).

Recommendations

To comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance, the WRC recommends that Popular Garment either:

- Provide compelling evidence that the company selected the five union committee members for layoff for legitimate non-discriminatory reasons, without regard to their union activism; or
- Reinstatement the five union leaders to their previous positions in the factory with full back pay for the period since their layoff.

2. Discriminatory Mass Dismissal of Union Members

Findings

The WRC consulted with a professional statistician at Pennsylvania State University who calculated that, all other factors being equal, the probability that the company would select, among the roughly 500 workers out of the plant's total workforce of 1,600 whom it chose to layoff, roughly 300 out of the 600 workers who were members of the union, was less than 0.01 percent, or less than one in 10,000. This being the case, the WRC finds that there is very strong prima facie evidence that this layoff deliberately and discriminatorily targeted these workers because they were members of the union.

As noted, such apparent discriminatory targeting of union members for layoff violates international labor standards, Burmese law, and, by extension, the City's Ordinance and university codes of conduct. Moreover, under Burmese law, workers who have been dismissed on account of their union activities have the right to be reinstated.²⁹

Recommendations

To comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance, the WRC recommends that Popular Garment either:

- Provide compelling evidence that the company selected the roughly 300 union members for layoff for legitimate non-discriminatory reasons, without regard to their union membership; or
- Reinstatement all of the union members to their previous positions in the factory with full back pay for the period since their layoff.

²⁹ Labor Organisation Law, § 18 (“The labour organization has the right to demand the relevant employer to re-appoint a worker if such worker is dismissed by the employer and if there is cause to believe that the reasons of such dismissal were based on labour organization membership or activities, or were not in conformity with the labour laws.”).

F. Harassment and Abuse

1. Verbal Abuse

Findings

Workers reported to the WRC that several line leaders (forepersons) at Popular Garment use derogatory language toward and yell at employees who decline to work overtime or ask for leave. One worker testified that she had overheard the factory's line leaders yell at workers, calling them "bastards" and "whores" when these employees did not want to perform overtime. In particular, the line leaders from the factory's Sewing Lines 1, 6, and 7 were singled out by the workers as being the most abusive.

While Burmese labor laws are silent on the issue of verbal abuse of workers by employers, the City's Ordinance, prohibits, "subject[ing] any Worker to any physical, sexual, or other illegal harassment or abuse,"³⁰ University codes of conduct include a similar prohibition.³¹

Likewise, the code of conduct for member companies of the Myanmar Garment Manufacturers Association, of which Popular Garment is a member, states that the members will ensure that, "Management at all levels treat their workers with respect and dignity and shall not engage in abusive or inappropriate behavior toward workers. Disciplinary measures may not involve physical punishment or psychological harassment."³² Verbal abuse of employees clearly violates all of these standards.

Recommendations

To comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance, the WRC recommends that Popular Garment take the following steps:

- Implement a policy prohibiting verbal abuse, or any other form of abuse, and inform all line leaders, supervisors, and managers that they will be subject to discipline if they engage in verbal or other abuse against any employee; and
- Communicate this policy through written and verbal announcement to employees, including how to bring a complaint should they be subjected to verbal or other abuse.

2. Demeaning Video Surveillance of Company Restrooms

Findings

Workers also told the WRC that the factory had installed a closed-circuit television (“CCTV”) camera in the plant that faces the toilets used by employees—a practice which is demeaning to the personal dignity of employees and constitutes a form of psychological harassment. Such harassment, as noted above, is prohibited under the City’s Ordinance, university codes of conduct, and the code of conduct of the Myanmar Garment Manufacturers Association.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with university and Myanmar Garment Manufacturers Association codes of conduct and the City’s Ordinance, Popular Garment should relocate or remove any CCTV cameras that are pointed toward the employee restrooms.

G. Occupational Health and Safety

1. Ergonomics

Findings

Burmese law requires employers to provide suitable seating arrangements for all workers, including those who are generally required to work in a standing position.³³ Failure to provide ergonomically sound chairs for employees’ use while seated can, over time, result in musculoskeletal disorders, including injuries to the back and shoulders that cause ongoing pain,³⁴ thereby, violating the legal requirement that factories be maintained in manner consistent with worker safety.³⁵

Workers interviewed by the WRC described the chairs provided to them at Popular Garment as plain wooden benches that lack backrests, padding, casters, swivels, seat pan, height and back adjustment, or lumbar support.³⁶ These chairs, therefore, fail to meet the legal requirements.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City’s Ordinance, Popular Garment should provide employees who work in a seated position with chairs that meet minimum ergonomic standards, equipped with back and arm rests, padded seats, casters and swivels, seat height and back angle adjustments, and lumbar support.

2. Failure to Provide Personal Protective Equipment

Findings

Workers in Popular Garment’s cutting department who operate handheld machine cutters reported to the WRC that they have not been provided with steel mesh gloves as personal protective equipment (“PPE”) to protect them from the cutters’ sharp blades. At least one worker has had an injury to their finger due to the failure to provide this PPE. This omission violates Burmese labor laws, which require employers to provide workers with PPE at no cost to the employees.³⁷

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that Popular Garment, to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City’s Ordinance, ensure that workers who operate handheld machine cutters are provided with steel gloves.

3. Unhygienic Toilet Facilities

Findings

According to workers’ testimony, Popular Garment fails to keep the washrooms in a clean and hygienic state, as required by Burmese law.³⁸ Workers report that often they find excrement on the toilet pan (toilets are “squat” toilets with a pan on the floor), and that no tissue paper is provided for the employees’ use. Prior to the onset of the Covid-19 pandemic, soap also was not provided in the toilet, although currently it is being supplied.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City’s Ordinance, Popular Garment should ensure that the factory’s washrooms, including the toilets, are cleaned several times per day and are kept well-stocked with hand soap and tissue paper.

³⁸ Factories Act, §21 (1e) (“Latrines and urinals shall be employed, maintained in a clean and sanitary condition at all times.”).

4. Excessive Temperatures

Findings

Burmese labor law mandates that workplace temperatures must be maintained at levels that will “secure workers [...] reasonable conditions of comfort and health.”³⁹ Workers interviewed, reported that they felt very hot in the factory and that only few ventilation fans had been installed inside the plant. Although it would be necessary to inspect the factory in order to determine whether the ambient temperatures at Popular Garment are at a level that is unhealthy for workers, employees’ testimony clearly indicates that the factory is violating the requirement under Burmese law that factory temperatures also be maintained at a level that is comfortable for workers.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City’s Ordinance and address excessive heat levels in the factory, Popular Garment should maintain temperatures at a comfortable level in all areas of the factory at all times, by installing additional fans, and, if necessary evaporative cooling pads or air-conditioning.⁴⁰

5. Unhygienic Eating Area

Findings

Burmese law requires that factories with more than 100 workers provide and maintain an eating area for employees.⁴¹ Workers testified that the eating area provided by Popular Garment is much too small for the factory’s workforce, with insufficient numbers of tables and chairs. As a result of this overcrowding, some workers sit onto the ground to eat and others eat lunch while standing up.

Workers also reported, in further violation of Burmese law,⁴² the canteen is not kept clean. Workers described the building that houses the employees’ eating area also is used as a warehouse for the rolls of cloth that the factory uses to make garments, introducing cotton dust

³⁹ Factories Act, 1951, §15 (1) (“Effective and suitable arrangement shall be made in every factory for securing and maintaining in every workroom adequate ventilation by the circulation of fresh air, and such equable temperatures as will secure workers therein reasonable conditions of comfort and health.”).

⁴⁰ Evaporative cooling pad systems reduce temperatures by drawing air through vertically mounted irrigated fiber pads. See, e.g., Brian Strobel, Richard Stewart, and Ted Short, “Evaporative Cooling Pads: Use in Lowering Indoor Air Temperature,” fact sheet (Ohio State Univ. 1999).

⁴² Factories Act, § 49 (2) (“The rest-sheds, rest rooms or lunch room to be provided under sub-section (1) shall be sufficiently lighted, ventilated and maintained as far as practicable in a cool and clean condition.”).

into the eating area. Moreover, the eating area is also located near restrooms and an open wastewater canal, both from which bad odors often come.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends that Popular Garment takes the following measures to comply with Burmese law, university codes of conduct, and the City's Ordinance:

- Ensure that the eating area it provides for employees is of sufficient size to allow all workers to sit at tables while eating; and
- Provide an eating area in a dedicated location that does not also serve as a warehouse, is kept in a clean condition, and is not adjacent to sources of bad odors.

6. Unsafe Employer-Provided Transportation

Findings

Workers reported to the WRC that, because there is no public transportation within the industrial zones where Popular Garment is located, the company provides employees with transport to and from work in the back of flat-bed trucks which, in Myanmar, are called “ferries.” According to workers, Popular Garment has arranged for 12 such trucks to provide transport for the workers.

Workers reported that the trucks used to transport them to and from work are often highly overcrowded, with as many as 60 workers packed onto a single truck-bed, resulting in some workers having to stand while the vehicle is in motion. These trucks do not provide workers with protection against inclement weather, much less against injury in case of an accident.

International labor standards recommend that employers provide safe transportation for employees in cases where alternative modes of transport are not available.⁴³ The transportation Popular Garment provides to workers, however, does not comply with this guidance, as it is highly unsafe for workers.

As a result, the transportation also fails to comply with university codes of conduct, which require that factories “provide a safe and healthy working environment to prevent accidents and injury to health arising out of, [or] linked with .. the[ir] operation[s].” An injury to a worker while being transported to or from the factory on the back of a company-provided truck both “aris[es] out of” and is “linked with” the factory's operations.

Recommendations

The WRC recommends Popular Garment, to comply with international labor standards and university codes of conduct, ensure that the transportation it provides for employees to and from the factory is safe for workers, including at minimum that it is not overcrowded and all passengers are provided with fixed seating.

⁴³ ILO Recommendation 102 (Welfare Facilities), Article 32 (“Where adequate and practicable transport facilities for the workers are necessary and cannot be provided in any other way, the undertakings in which they are employed should themselves provide the transport.”).

V. Conclusion

The violations the WRC has identified in this report, though significant, are amenable to remediation and correction by the factory's owner, Beaume, with the assistance and involvement of the City's suppliers, Fechheimer and Muscatello's, and the university licensee, Cutter and Buck. Beaume should respond to each of the findings in this report with whatever relevant information the company wishes to provide and indicate its willingness to implement the recommendations in this report, along with a time-bound schedule for doing so. The WRC asks that Fechheimer and Cutter and Buck require Beaume to provide such a response by July 20, 2020.
