

Your Turn to Draw the Lines, San Francisco!

Get trained on www.ReDrawSF.org to make your voice heard. Healthy City continues to support California redistricting by launching local redistricting GIS capabilities in San Francisco. We created a customized, user friendly website - www.ReDrawSF.org - for the public to participate in the process. On the website, you can draw your own ideas for district lines to submit and save or print your maps to present to the San Francisco Redistricting Task Force. As you adjust the district boundaries you will immediately see how demographics change and can make sure your proposals fit the redistricting criteria used by the Task Force. You can access redistricting data and a variety of other community data in order to create maps, tables, and charts to submit them as public testimony or to just stay informed. You will also be able to view official draft maps released by the Task Force and see the demographic affects they will have on communities.

Healthy City has created a customized website - www.ReDrawSF.org - for the public to participate in local redistricting. From the website you can draw your own ideas for district lines or a community of interest and present it to the San Francisco Redistricting Task Force.

In this webinar you will learn how to:

- Draw your own plans for a district, a part of a district or multiple districts
- View data related to your district to make sure you meet the redistricting criteria
- See how the data changes as the lines change
- See a wide range of additional data related to communities of interest to support your proposal
- View map plans drawn by others
- View the official draft and final maps when released by the Task Force and see the demographic effects they will have on communities.

After registering you will receive a confirmation email containing information about joining the Webinar.
